

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

This chapter presents conclusions based on the formulated of the research problems. In addition, this chapter also presents some suggestions for the next researcher who intends to do the similar research.

A. Conclusion

From the previous chapter, it can be concluded that not all politeness strategies are used by the interviewers. They show a difference when using the politeness strategies. Steve Inskip as the American radio interviewer used all strategies: Bald on record, positive politeness strategy, negative politeness strategy and off record strategy. While, John Humphrys only used two of those strategies. They are Bald on record strategy and negative politeness strategy.

Inskip mostly used negative politeness strategy in interviewing his interviewee. The most often type used of negative politeness strategy is Impersonalization. While, the most used strategy by John Humphrys is bald on record strategy when interviewing Tony Blair, British Prime Minister. He often used the type no or little desire to maintain someone's face. This makes Inskip's interview seems more relax than Humphrys interview which has more time for debate when discussing the issue.

Therefore, it is considered that Steve Inskeep is more polite than John Humphrys when conducting the question in the interview.

American and British style are considered as the one direction for all English learners in the world. The two interviewers, Steve Inskeep from American Radio and John Humphrys from British Radio are an objective professional interviewers. Their utterances become the data of this research is because the writer wants to investigate pragmatics side of those two English styles. And it does not mean that this result in this research can be generally as a representation of those English styles.

This result of this study can give a contribution to English language teaching. As it is a good example of politeness strategies used for teachers to know what appropriate things to say in some particular situations when doing teaching. It is because the habitual way of students learning is mostly influenced by what they see and listen from their teachers.

B. Suggestion

Based on the study conducted, the writer can recommend some points of suggestions,

1. For English Students

The English students need to enrich their knowledge and broaden their inside about everything dealing with their main study. It is also necessary to learn many things around them as like a talk radio show which can be sample in investigating theories in pragmatics. It is suggested that the students learn many kinds of resource in order to give them new information and knowledge.

2. For Next Researcher

This genre of talk show has many aspects to be analyzed. For the next researcher who wants to conduct a study in the same field, it is suggested to use these findings as a starting point in conducting their research. The next researchers are suggested to use different data sources or same data with different case of politeness theory. The thing that should be considered is when using this kind of political interview, it will be better if the data be analyzed by using critical discourse analysis.
