Blue Print Critical Thinking Questionnaire

Based on the theory of Peter A. Facione, there are six core variables of critical thinking. Those are interpretation, analysis, evaluation, inference, explanation, and self regulation as stated in chapter 2. The variables divided into sub-variable (Peter, 2015). There are 29 questionnaire items (before validation) with 1- 4 point of likert scale (strongly disagree, disagree, agree, and strongly agree).

The table bellow shows the theory of critical thinking as the basic of questionnaire item;

Core Critical Thinking
Variable	Experts' Consensus Description	Sub-Variable
Interpretation	To express and comprehend the significance of a wide variety of situations, experiences, data, judgments, events, beliefs, conventions, rules, criteria, or procedure	categorize decode significance clarify meaning
Analysis	to identify the actual and intended inferential relationships among questions, descriptions, statements, concepts, or other forms of representation intended to express judgment, belief, reason, information, opinions.	examine ideas
		identify arguments identify reasons and claims
Inference	to identify elements needed to draw reasonable conclusions; to consider relevant information and reduce the consequences flowing from data, principles, statements, judgments, evidence, beliefs, concepts, opinions, questions, descriptions, or other representation	query evidence conjecture alternatives draw logically valid or justified conclusions
Evaluation	to assess the credibility of statements or other representations that are accounts or descriptions of a person's experience, perception, situation, belief, judgment, or opinion; and to assess the logical	Assess credibility of claims

	strength of the actual or intended inferential relationship among descriptions, questions, statements, or other representation.	Assess quality of arguments that were made using inductive or deductive reasoning
Explanation	to justify and state that reasoning in terms of the evidential, conceptual, criteriological, methodological, and contextual considerations upon which one's results were based and present one's reasoning in the form of cogent arguments	Describing method and results Justify procedures Proposing and defending argument(casual and conceptual) Well-presented and full-reasoned argument
Self-regulation	self-consciously to monitor one's cognitive activities, the elements used in those activities, and the result educed, particularly by applying skills in analysis, and evaluation to one's own inferential judgment with a view toward questioning, confirming, validating, or correcting either one's reasoning or one's results	Self-assessment Self-correction

APPENDIX 3

Blue Print Self-Confidence Questionnaire

As developed by (Park & Lee, 2005), there are four variables of self-confidence focusing on communication willingness. The variables are situational confidence, communication confidence, language potential confidence, and language ability confidence. Those variables divided into several sub-variables.

Beside, Shrauger (1990) in book of (Robinson, Philip, & Wrightsman, 1991) introduced Personal Evaluation Inventory (PEI) which designed to measure the specific domains of general self-confidence. The domains are academic performance, athletics, physical appearance, romantic relationships, and social interaction, speaking with people, general confidence, and mood. But in this context, the researcher only takes three domains or variables that related to the research. The three variables are academic performance, social interaction, and general confidence. The reason of researcher only takes three variable is because the rest of variable is not related to debate based self-confidence of student and it is too general, such as romantic relationship, athletic, physical appearance, and mood. Beside that, the variable of speaking with people already existed and included in previous theory. Therefore, it is no longer taken by researcher.

The table below shows the theory used by researcher

Core of Self-Confidence
Variable	Definition	Sub-variable
Situational confidence	Situational confidence refers to how the students feel toward themselves, how they view themselves in classroom and also the students' feeling toward their importance by others and needed by classmates	Students feel they are great students
		Students feel that they are important in class
		Students feel that their class need them
Communication confidence	Communication confidence is whether or not the students feel shy while communicating with the rest of class, whether they feel shy when communicating with teacher and new people.	Students do not feel shy speaking in front of classmate
		Students do not feel shy speaking in front of teacher

		Students do not feel shy speaking in front of new people
Language potential confidence	Language potential confidence is viewed through students' perception if they get good english score, can speak english perfectly, and get good toefl score.	Students think that they will get good english score
		Students think they will speak English perfectly
Language ability confidence	It refers to students' perception on learning language. How they think they can learn to speak english and how they think that they are good english speaker.	Students think that they can learn to speak english
		Students think that they are good speaker of English
Academic performance	Academic confidence refers to the ability, self-concept of academic ability and academic motivation of students. It is positively correlate with achievement of the students. They will show certainty in succeeding assignment, test or academic goals, they seek out activities that are intellectually challenging because they know they can do it.	Ability
		Self- concept of academic ability
		Academic motivation
Social interaction	Students as well as other people have the need to be accepted. It motivates them to seek out the interaction with others. Those who have good social interaction will feel at ease and have no awkwardness in crowd, they know how to behave with composure and mingle as well as with people who have different personalities.	Feeling at ease and have no awkwardness in any crowd
		Know how to behave with composure and mingle
		Know how to behave with different personalities
General confidence	General confidence is psychological shield to cope with the risk of environmental instability. Those who have more experience in past and work out over and over again can be quite sure that things will also work out in the future. Students who have good general confidence have a type of assurance that	Optimistic show a belief "i can do it"
