The first conclusion is about the discrimination faced by three African-American women in Hidden Figures movie. The researcher finds that discriminations are race discrimination and gender discrimination. The discrimination faced by Three African-Americans, namely Katherine Goble, Mary Jackson, and Dorothy Vaughan, often occurs in their work environment at NASA, where white people dominate. An example of direct or indirect racial discrimination such as the separation of toilets, the division of buildings between blacks and whites, the separation of seats in public facilities, and the separation of drinking utensils. In addition to racial discrimination, the three African-American woman also faced gender discrimination, which is obtained not only from the white race that dominates but also from those closest to them.

The second conclusion is about what are the three African-American do when they get discrimination in Hidden Figures movie. Those are Dare to argue about racial segregation that makes minorities like them oppressed. and also, they do not necessarily comply with injustice and continue to struggle in their way to equalize the race between blacks and whites and gender equality which is one of the problems other than race. and finally, after the discrimination faced by Katherine Goble, Mary Jackson, and Dorothy Vaughan, they were able to get the respect of white people for their struggle and persistence to prove that being a minority is not a weakness
